A History of Maine Ornamental
Celebrating 20 Years of Making Ordinary Extraordinary

Starting as a one-man operation that grew to a multimillion company, Maine Ornamental embodies the classic American success story. Maine Ornamental Woodworkers was born in 1989: When a New Englander named Dana Smith could not find the post caps he needed to build a traditional New England fence, he decided to make and sell them himself.

Demand for his product came quickly. From his basement shop, Smith sold more than $90,000 worth of post caps the first year.

Birth of a Partnership
A quest for the right wood for his post caps led Smith to Rick Preble, a born salesman and the general manager of a lumber mill in Washington. Preble came to see Smith’s product firsthand and immediately asked for samples, which he took to a Boston lumber show. At the show, Preble wrote over $100,000 worth of orders and piqued the interest of his largest distributor.

A partnership was born, and Preble doubled the sales of Maine Ornamental products in each of the next two years.

Extending the Reach
As the home improvement craze took hold in 1993, Preble and Smith set their sights on the “big box” retailers, where they secured test spots in select regions. By 1994, their sales had eclipsed $1 million.

Within another two years, sales had more than doubled and Maine Ornamental post caps were on the retailers shelves nationwide.

Toward Better Quality at a Better Price
By the late 1990s, Smith and Preble were beginning to see cheap imitations of their products in the marketplace. Working closely with a specially selected factory overseas, they found they could increase the quality of their post caps by having each one hand-sanded, hand-glued, hand-stapled and hand-packaged. Maine Ornamental was now able to turn out an even better product — at less cost. The market responded and sales continued to multiply.

Innovative Design
Maine Ornamental stays ahead of the competition through constant innovations in post cap design. Today, Maine Ornamental makes more than 300 post caps in dozens of styles and materials, including pressure-treated pine, cedar, redwood, mahogany, aluminum, copper, composite and vinyl. Recent innovations have been both decorative and practical, such as a Tiffany-style stained-glass post cap and a solar-lighted post cap.

Moving Forward
Smith and Preble’s 15-year partnership made Maine Ornamental the largest manufacturer and marketer of decorative post caps in North America. In 2005, a consignment relationship with building products giant Universal Forest Products led to the purchase of Maine Ornamental by Universal Consumer Products, Inc. Smith retired, and Preble became president of Maine Ornamental under the Universal umbrella. Still based in Maine, the company also maintains facilities in Washington and in San Diego, California.

With a reach that spans continents, Maine Ornamental continues to lead its category with innovative design, selection and sales. If you buy a post cap in the United States, chances are it was made by Maine Ornamental.
